Pneumonias are the most common cause of AIDS-related deaths worldwide. In the last two decades, the incidence of the disease has risen in HIV-infected subjects. The treatment of PCP remains based on highly active antiretroviral therapy. In the case of community-acquired pneumonia in HIV-infected patients, the bacterial etiology is more likely to be community-acquired and the cause of death is usually due to pneumonia in patients with CD4 counts under 200 cells/mm3. Drug-resistance limits the choice of the appropriate antibiotics, while comorbid conditions may impede the use of fluoroquinolones in such patients. Bacterial pneumonias should be systematically treated with broad-spectrum antimicrobial agents.
