The curfew, which would come into effect at 8pm local time (17:00 GMT), would be in effect from Monday through Wednesday this week. The announcement comes after intense fighting broke out between the militants, Iraqi security forces and the Kurdish Peshmerga in and around Mosul. On Monday, Mr Abadi's office said Iraqi forces backed by the Kurdish Peshmerga had launched an assault on the Old City of Mosul with air strikes from the C-130 planes. An Iraqi military official said at least 20 militants were killed in the fighting. Iraqi forces have been trying to retake Mosul since last summer, but the offensive has been slowed by Isis's ability to snipe at security forces from its desert encampments. The Iraqi Army was able to take control of the Old City and its adjacent districts in July, but were unable to advance further. Deeper fighting took place in October and continued as part of the US-led coalition on Christmas Day. Map showing Mosul's Old City neighbourhood and the area where Isis' stronghold was located Mosul has been under the control of Isis since June 2014 when it rapidly expanded in several northern Iraqi provinces and declared a caliphate, or Islamic state. The city of roughly one million people is the last major Isis stronghold in Iraq. Security forces have been trying to dislodge the group from Mosul's Old City since July, and have reportedly seized nearly half of it. The militants have set up 6d1f23a050
